CONFORMS

SURFACE	STATUS
README	Sentence-case headings, tables over prose, concrete claims with real units
Voice	Plainspoken. "Everything runs in the browser – images never leave the machine they were opened on" is the register exactly
Output artefact	Cut sheets are dimensioned print documents – the brand's native form

DELIBERATELY DIVERGES

Nothing yet. The divergences below are debt, not decisions.

DIVERGENCE	DETAIL
public/css/style.css uses a generic dark-app palette	#16181c background, #4a8ae8 blue accent, #414753 / #3a3f48 chrome. None of these are brand colours.
Sans-serif UI type	No JetBrains Mono anywhere in the app shell
Rounded corners and soft shadows	Both are forbidden by the guide. Radius is 0 and depth is a hard 4px 4px 0 offset

QUEUED

- Restyle `public/css/style.css` onto `riposte-brand.css`. This is the highest-value brand work in the repo – Cutsheet is a print layout tool, so a design system built around dimensioned technical documents is a natural fit rather than a costume. The mapping is direct:
 - Toolbar and panels → `.spec` cards with `bone-dim` headers
 - Sheet preview → `bone` field with 2px ink rules
 - Bleed / margin / cut-line indicators → the accent rotation, pink → marigold → teal
 - Primary action → `.cta` with the hard-offset hover
 - Blue `#4a8ae8` → the working accent, `-accent`
- Check cut-line contrast against the artwork, not just against the UI. Cut lines are guides over user images; they need to read on both light and dark artwork. This is the one place a bright accent at 2.27:1 is genuinely fine – it is a hairline over a photo, not text – but it should be a deliberate call, not an accident.
- Add `footer.colophon` to `public/index.html`.
- `docs/` screenshots regenerated after the restyle.

Do the restyle as its own PR. The app is working and tested; a stylesheet swap should be reviewable on its own and screenshot-diffed against `tests/browser-render.html`.
